

Plan your lessons well and review your progress

Teacher reflection and self assessment is an important way to ensure lessons and units are linking classroom learning to community knowledge. The Teacher Self Assessment Rubric below will support teachers in their level of connection to at-home learning.

Teacher Self Assessment Rubric

Teacher Self Assessment	Level of Lesson Planning			Resources for Success
	1: Beginning	2: Emerging	3: Extending
I connected my lesson/unit from school to home	The lesson includes activities for the student to ask their family questions or for families to share their knowledge with their child.	The lesson includes activities that allow the student to learn from their family and bring that knowledge back to the classroom.	The lesson includes activities that allow the student to learn from their family and bring the knowledge back to school by sharing with a large or small audience (school wide, families, classmates, learning buddies).
I included families throughout the unit or lesson	The lesson includes language that families use at home.	I've included language that families use at home and communicate what we are learning to families throughout the week.	I've included language families use at home, communicated our learning goals and have sent frequent evidence of our learning through pictures or student quotes.	Texting apps, ClassDojo, FaceBook group
I connected this unit or lesson to community activities (subsistence, drumming, dancing, Native Olympics)	I discussed or provided classroom activities that connected to community activities.	I discussed or provided classroom activities that connected to community activities. I provided activities for students to observe community activities related to the lesson/unit.	The lesson brings community members or family members into the classroom to share their knowledge related to the community activities or we took a field trip (real or virtual) to connect our learning to community activities.
I used community resources (Elder, agency, business, subject expert) in this unit or lesson	I used classroom activities to connect classroom learning to community resources.	I used classroom activities to connect classroom learning to community resources and provided activities for students to enhance their learning by using a community resource.	An Elder, agency, business or subject expert came into the classroom or we took a field trip (real or virtual) to the community resource to connect our learning.	